Materials and Construction

Shotcrete (pneumatically applied reinforcing concrete) is the strongest and most durable pool construction material. Shotcrete pools are reinforced with steel rods to withstand the extreme pressures of soil, water and harsh New England winters. Our stone coping, rocks, and tile are handpicked and individually chiseled to ensure the highest quality possible. Permanence, durability, flexibility of design, and aesthetic beauty makes shotcrete construction unmatched.

The construction process begins with excavating the site and forming out to establish the basic shape [Fig 1 attached]. Plumbing lines are then installed which will later be encased within the shotcrete wall. The strength of our pools lies in the steeling process and shotcrete application [ Fig 2 attached]. The shotcrete is pumped through a series of hoses, mixes with pressurized air, and gets sprayed over the steel framework, up to 12" thick [Fig 3 attached]. After the borderline tile and coping stone is completed around the pool perimeter; the shotcrete shell is coated with a colored plaster to give it a smooth, nonporous finish [Fig 4 attached]. The pool is then filled and ready to use.
