The bird women were doing splendidly shopping and going to museums , spending all day with each other. So many best friends to enjoy. Then the goat men arrived and threatened to leach the color out of their livesI promise there will be a happy ending.

The bird women tried some spells and incantations that had been passed to them over the ages. Like a lot of fledglings they didn't get totally right the first time

One of the problems with the goat men thought the bird women is that, mostly they just didn't know how to dress. They hope the retro look their friend chose might rub off

The bird women were especially concerned about how well the goat men dress (would they even take a bath?) because three of them were getting married together and other bird women would be bringing dates.

Fir their dresses they decided virginal white was too BORING so they went with similar dresses in different hues. Here they are at the photographer before the big event with one very long bouquet.

One of the goat men asked a bird woman out for a date. He said is was a very special, fifties themed costume party and he had just the costumes in mind. She had been encouraging him to be more, well, clean and dress more , well, Madison Avenue and less 21st century barn so she hoped he would take the hints. The bird women had to have the right outfits for their busy lives. They had a favorite designer Oleg Hooter, who developed two designs just for them. On the left the Nest Builder which had pockets capacious enough to store the odd twig , bit of twine , yarn ends and some bird seed just in case a nest repair had to be done "on the fly". The Incubator model however made it possible for the mother bird woman to get her errands done and still keep the fledgling nearby.

The bird women really needed to relax and a day in the park was just the thing. They took all of their pets because the pets had many hours of training and were entirely trustworthy off leash. The only exception was the cat, who they kept in a gilded cage during the walk (but which had a larger cage at home). They were totally clear that the cat was not to be trusted.

Well, the bird women got the proverbial itch to travel and since Japan is once again open to visitors, off they went. They considered France, but since the French have been known to eat song birds, not to mention frog legs, they gave it a pass and went to the land of the rising sun. Of course they had to dress up so they would fit in.

Just as we thought, one of the girls fell head over heels for a very special SUMO goat. Apparently the fine fellow is from a family of serow goats the product of a big night between some goats and some antelopes.
